The Day of the Dead: An Example of Inculturation in the Catholic Church

The Day of the Dead, celebrated especially in Mexico and other Latin American countries, is one of the people's most profound cultural expressions. This festivity, which combines indigenous and Christian elements, reflects the people's faith in eternal life and communion with the departed. Far from being a mere popular tradition, the Day of the Dead represents a process of inculturation in which the Gospel has been received, expressed, and celebrated within a specific culture—illuminating its symbols and values through the light of Christian faith.

A. The Christian Meaning of Inculturation: The Catholic Church has recognized the importance of welcoming and purifying the cultural expressions of peoples within her evangelizing mission.

Pope Paul VI, in his exhortation Evangelii Nuntiandi (1975), teaches that “Evangelization loses much of its power and effectiveness if it does not take into account the people to whom it is addressed, if it does not use their language, their signs, and their symbols” (EN 63).

Inculturation is not merely an external adaptation but an inner transformation of cultural values in the light of the Gospel. St. John Paul II defines inculturation as “The incarnation of the Gospel in native cultures and, at the same time, the introduction of these cultures into the life of the Church” (Redemptoris Missio, 52).

From this perspective, the Day of the Dead appears as a concrete example of how Christian faith has penetrated the indigenous worldview, giving new meaning to ancient rites related to death and life after death.

B. Indigenous Roots and Christian Transformation:

Before the arrival of Christianity, the native peoples of Meso-America already had rituals dedicated to the dead, understood as part of a natural and spiritual cycle. With evangelization, these rites were embraced by the Church and purified in the light of faith in the resurrection of the dead and the communion of saints.

The Catholic celebrations of All Saints' Day (November 1st) and the Commemoration of All the Faithful Departed (November 2nd) provided a liturgical framework in which the people could express their remembrance of ancestors—not from a cyclical view of time—but from the Christian hope in eternal life.

The altar or ofrenda, for example, which originally served to spiritually nourish the departed, became a domestic altar of prayer, where images of Christ, the Virgin Mary, the saints, and photos of deceased loved ones are placed. The presence of the crucifix, bread, and candles evokes the redemptive sacrifice of Christ and the light of faith that conquers the darkness of death.

C. Theological and Pastoral Vision: According to the Aparecida Document, “Inculturation does not mean mere adaptation, but an interior transformation of authentic cultural values through their integration into Christianity, and the rooting of Christianity in the various human cultures” (DA 479).

The Day of the Dead, therefore, expresses this “interior transformation:” respect for the deceased, the importance of family, and the continuity of life are deeply human values that Christianity elevates with the truth of the Gospel.

Far from being a superstition, when celebrated with faith, the Day of the Dead becomes an act of Christian hope, a recognition that death does not have the last word.

As the Catechism of the Catholic Church teaches: “Communion with the dead . . . joins us in the same charity and helps us on our way to the Kingdom” (CCC 958).

D. Challenges and Pastoral Discernment: However, the Church also calls for discernment. Pope Francis warns that true inculturation must never lose the core of the Gospel: “Faith cannot be imposed from without; it must be born and grow from within” (Evangelii Gaudium, 236).

Therefore, pastoral agents must accompany the people in these cultural expressions, promoting catechesis on eternal life and the communion of saints, while avoiding magical or superstitious interpretations.

When the Day of the Dead is lived as a time to pray for the faithful departed, visit cemeteries, and affirm hope in the Resurrection, it becomes a truly Christian celebration.

The Day of the Dead is a living testimony of how Christian faith can dialogue with cultures, purify them, and enrich them with the light of the Gospel.

In this feast, Latin American peoples express their faith in eternal life, their family love, and their communion with the departed—all within a form that is profoundly their own.

Thus, this feast stands as a luminous example of inculturation, in which Christianity does not destroy what it encounters but assumes, redeems, and elevates it. As Pope Francis affirms, “Grace supposes culture, and the gift of God is incarnate in the culture of those who receive it” (Evangelii Gaudium, 115).

In the Day of the Dead, the Church finds a living opportunity for evangelization—where memory, art, family, and faith intertwine to joyfully proclaim:

“Christ has conquered death and has opened for us the gates of eternal life.”

Knights' Corner

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS COUNCIL 1872

Brothers and Families,

Your Knights have recently been busy living out our mission of Faith in Action—assisting with parking duties during the Bishop's Ordination, hosting a Family Night "Burger Feed," and distributing warm coats to children in need through our "Coats for Kids" Program.

As we look ahead, our calendar remains full of opportunities to serve.
 In the coming months, we'll be assisting with the Bend Christmas Parade, selling Christmas Cards, and serving food at the Christmas Faire and several Parish Breakfasts.

Each of these activities provides a wonderful opportunity for us as fathers to involve our children in service. Believe me—moms will appreciate having a few hours to themselves!
 More importantly, these experiences teach our kids the joy and value of giving back to the community.

So, the next time a volunteer opportunity arises, bring your child along.
 We've seen the children of Knights lending a hand at many of our events, and it's inspiring to watch. The Knights of Columbus are all about Faith, Family, and Fraternity, and we'd love to see more of our families serving side by side.

Vivat Jesus,

Andrew Untermeyer ♦ Grand Knight, Council 1872

You and Costco Can Help!

Do you shop at Costco once a week, once a month, every two weeks, as I do? Recently I discovered that Costco features over 100 non-perishable food items for $9.99 or less.

I've decided to buy at least one item to place in the St. Vincent de Paul donation bins at St. Francis every time I shop at Costco.

Please consider spending $10 each time you shop at Costco to help feed the hungry in our community—especially during this coming holiday season. SVdP drop boxes are available in the Narthex. Thank you!
